

La Bohème Study Guide

The Rimrock Opera Company

Presents

WHAT'S OPERA, DOC?

Opera is all the arts wrapped up in one cool package—music, dance, drama with stage settings, costumes and an orchestra. Opera sings a story. In a movie, characters say and do things. In an opera, characters sing their passions – joy, sorrow, hope, and despair. Opera is very similar to Broadway shows except that opera singers are not amplified. They project only through using their own natural voice resonance. Musical theater performers use small microphones placed in their clothing or hair to amplify their voices. Opera singers are “athletes of the voice” – trained to sing notes that will project throughout the theater without any electronic devices. However for the school touring show, American Opera Idol, the Master of Ceremonies uses a microphone.

Another difference between operas and musicals is that the action in musical theatre is usually spoken, with songs describing a character’s feelings about the situation. In opera, nearly everything is sung.

Our Mission

The mission of Rimrock Opera is to enhance the cultural life of this region by providing high quality opera productions and to make opera available to everyone through outreach presentations and educational programming.

Synopsis: La Bohème

Latin Quarter of Paris, about 1830

Act I - A Garret Studio

The winter cold is apparent in the garret of the poet, Rodolfo and Marcello, a painter. Rodolfo burns his old manuscripts for heat. Colline, the philosopher, joins them. The men are surprised when Schaunard, a musician, arrives with food, drinks and cigars. He insists that they dine out. Benoit, the landlord, comes to collect the rent. The young artists encourage him to brag that he has a mistress on the side, then pretend to be offended and rush him out. When the men head off to the Café Momus, Rodolfo stays behind briefly to finish an article he is writing. The neighbor, a seamstress named Mimì, knocks. She needs her candle lighted, but she is weak from illness and the exertion of climbing several flights of stairs. As she turns to leave, she realizes she has misplaced her key. Rodolfo has secretly pocketed the key and persuades Mimì to stay and talk with him. They are strongly attracted to each other. Their short acquaintance leads to a jubilation of love. They kiss tenderly and leave to join the others.

Act II - A Square in the Latin Quarter outside the Café Momus

The streets are crowded with Christmas Eve revelers. Parpignol is selling children's toys. The festivities include a parade passing through the Quarter. Mimì shows off the bonnet Rodolfo has bought her. Marcello's mistress, Musetta, sweeps in with her elderly suitor, Alcindoro. She causes a scene to attract the attention of the young men. Her behavior scandalizes Alcindoro. Annoyed, Musetta screams that her shoes hurt, and sends him off to get her a new pair. Meanwhile, she escapes with Marcello and his friends, leaving her bill—generously adding the charges for the entire group—for Alcindoro to pay when he returns. He has been duped before and slaps the bill in disgust on the table of the grande dame who owns the café.

Intermission – twenty minutes

Act III - The City Gates

Mimì asks Marcello for help. She plans to leave Rodolfo since his jealousy is making things impossible. Marcello talks to Rodolfo, who admits he loves Mimì passionately, but realizes that because of his poverty he cannot care for her in her illness, and the situation is driving him into hopeless desperation. Mimì's cough reveals that she has been eavesdropping. Rodolfo tries to comfort her. The lovers postpone their parting until spring. Marcello and Musetta quarrel.

Act IV - In the Garret

A few months pass. Marcello and Rodolfo try to forget about their loves and pretend that they are absorbed in their arts. Colline and Schaunard bring food for dinner. Musetta arrives with the dying Mimì, whom she has found on the street near collapse. They help Mimì to bed. Musetta and Marcello leave to sell Musetta's earrings to buy medicine, and Colline goes out to pawn his precious old overcoat. Rodolfo and Mimì have a last caress. Marcello returns with medicine and Musetta with a new muff to warm Mimì's hands. Rodolfo thinks Mimì is resting peacefully and begins to relax. A doctor has been summoned, but it is too late to help their friend, who lapses into unconsciousness. As Musetta prays, Mimì dies. The others see that she has slipped away. When Rodolfo reads the expression on their faces, he is shocked into reality and plunged into despair. He cries out Mimì's name and weeps in helpless anguish.

About the Composer

Giacomo Antonio Domenico Michele Secondo Maria Puccini

(Born 1858, Lucca, Tuscany -- died 1924, Brussels, Belgium)

The Italian composer, born into a family of organists and choirmasters, was inspired to write operas after hearing Verdi's Aida in 1876. He was the most popular opera composer in the world at the time of his death, and many claim he still is beloved above all others.

For centuries, opera was dominated by larger-than-life characters: kings and queens, gods and goddesses, mythic figures holding the power of life and death over ordinary people. Over time, as opera became a more and more popular form of entertainment, things changed. Composers started writing operas about ordinary people, instead of those who ruled over them. The new style was called verismo, and Puccini was among its finest practitioners. Puccini's operas thrive on the reality that, at some point in their lives, people everywhere endure the same trials. They struggle with love, envy, betrayal, loss and heartbreak.

It's hard to say which of Puccini's many popular operas has been his greatest hit, but La Bohème is surely a prime candidate. It's a simple drama, involving common people. But their feelings are portrayed so deeply, and so vividly, that their emotions soon become ours, and their heartbreaks seem as wrenching as our own. – Washington National Opera

Education and Outreach

American Opera Idol

Rimrock Opera's school touring show, American Opera Idol (AOI), written by General Director Douglas Nagel and Staff Pianist Sandi Rabas, has completed a successful week of 11 performances in 6 middle schools, reaching 4,000 students.

AOI is loosely based on the hit TV series American Idol. Using operatic melodies, AOI also features a competition to choose the best singer. Complete with a master of ceremonies, judging panel and contestants, AOI scenes take place behind as well as before the curtain. With an unusual twist, methamphetamine abuse is introduced into the plot as one contestant befriends another who has a family member involved with meth.

The purpose of Rimrock Opera's school tour is to present captivating entertainment by professional artists combined with a dramatic plot focusing on methamphetamine dangers. The intent is to increase awareness by provoking students to conversation and consideration of the ravages of this destructive drug and to heighten social stigma against its use. An additional goal is to demonstrate to children between the age's levels of 5th grade through high school that opera and classical music are an approachable and enjoyable art form. Previous school tours have focused on elementary students.

American Opera Idol will tour again October 11-22, 2010. Schools interested in booking this show should contact Rimrock Opera office at 406.671.2214. To learn more about American Opera Idol, please visit our website at www.rimrockopera.org to view the study guide and further details.
